My grandparents grow vegetables. I sometimes help them on the weekend. On Sundays, they sell their vegetables at a local market.

Last Sunday, I went to the market with them. Many people came to buy our vegetables. A woman said, “Your vegetables are always very fresh and delicious, so I come here to get them every Sunday. I enjoy talking with you about your vegetables.” My grandfather said, “Thank you. We want to produce more delicious food for our customers.”

I remembered my teacher’s words in social studies class. He told us some good points about buying local food. For example, local food is fresh. Also, customers can see who produces the food. Local farmers can often listen to the opinions of customers. After my experience at the local market, I think these points are true. Now I’m interested in agriculture and I will learn more about it.
